Co-Founder, City Growers

City Growers' mission is to transform vacant lots in Boston into intensive urban farms that are economically and environmentally sustainable. Growers' combines the resources of community organizations, neighborhood associations and local markets for fresh produce to accomplish our three major goals which include increasing local access to affordable, nutrient-rich foods.

Glynn Lloyd is a Co-founder of City Growers, LLC and Chief Executive Officer of City Fresh Foods, which provides healthful meals to local schools, childcare centers and homebound elders.

Glynn co-founded City Growers with a vision of providing local retailers, restaurants and residents the option of buying their fresh produce from local, sustainable farms in Boston rather than large corporate farms across the country. In addition to fueling the local economy, by selling foods directly to the customer, City Growers is able to provide affordable, local, nutrient-rich produce to Boston residents, one third of whom struggle with food insecurity.

Prior to starting City Fresh Foods in 1994, Glynn was an educator in Boston and Louisiana public schools. He has served on numerous boards including The Food Project, Four Corners Main Streets, and Red Tomato, Canton MA. Glynn also sits on Boston Mayor Tom Menino's Urban Agricultural Working Group and is a member of the Mayor's Food Council.
